

Monitor Your Own Weaknesses and Improve Your Poker

The only way you can improve your poker game and become a better player is if you monitor your own weaknesses. Nobody is going to point out your weaknesses for you. If you want to improve on your weaknesses and make yourself a better player then you must figure out for yourself what you are doing wrong. There is no better way to get better at something than by strengthening the areas where you are weak.

Sometimes it can be difficult to figure out what your weaknesses are. The first thing you can do is open up your mind and look for weaknesses that are in your game. Figure out what your strengths and weaknesses are off the top of your head. From there, you should pay attention to your weaknesses while you are playing to see how accurate your guesses were.

Chances are you won't even realize what your weaknesses are off the top of your head. If you knew you had a weakness you would probably naturally try to fix it already. That is why the hardest part is to learn what your weaknesses are. Monitoring them and learning what they are is harder than actually fixing them. Once you learn your weaknesses you can do what you need to do in order to improve.

Break your game down and see where you are strong and where you are weak. If you actually break it down and play a little bit you shouldn't have a problem figuring out your weaknesses. It just takes some effort and studying of your game.

Once you figure out what your weaknesses are it is time to monitor them and improve on them. It is just important to make sure you do not get so into fixing your weaknesses that it makes your game even worse than before. You need to monitor your weaknesses at the same time as playing your game. It will not happen over night, but if you work on it you will improve. There is simply no other way to improve your weaknesses.

Some weaknesses are bigger than others. For example, you might be weak with your heads up game. These types of weaknesses are much easier to fix than smaller ones. If one of your weaknesses is your heads up game then you would obviously practice your heads up game. It would be the same thing with a smaller weakness. All of your weaknesses will add up. Fixing them will make an unbelievable difference in your skill level. Monitor your weaknesses and you will be able to fix them; that is where it all starts.
